Practical Tariff Talks.

One of the tariff schedules which defenders of the Payne-Aldrich law have been insisting contained marked reductions in that covering metals and manufactures of metals. The claim is well founded, in a few particulars. As a general proposition the revision of the metal schedule is upward. In the publication issued by the senate finance committee will be found two significant lines. One of these shows that on articles of voluntary use—an arbitrary classification made by some one unknown—the percentage of tariff under the old law was 42.84. The equivalent ad valorem under the new law is 43.46. Under the general designation of necessities—another classification arbitrarily made—it will be found that the old law carried a percentage of 30.21. The equivalent ad valorem under the new law is 29.71 per cent. This is a reduction on the necessities of one-half of one per cent. President Taft expressed his satisfaction with this law, and claims that it is a substantial reduction from the Dingley law. One half of one per cent will be regarded generally as a very insubstantial reduction. Suppose a merchant advertised substantial reductions in the price of clothing, and when customers hurried to buy they found he was selling $10 suits for $9.95 and $20 suits for 19.90, one-half of one per cent reduction! He would run serious risk of being branded as a fraud.

A reduction in the tariff, let it be remembered, does not necessarily mean a reduction in the price of the article affected. If the steel trust found that it could not market its products at cost plus the tariff it would sell them for less. If this market price was 10 per cent less than the sum of the tariff and production cost, it meant there was an excess tariff of 10 per cent. A reduction in the metal schedule of 10 per cent, the cutting off of the excess tariff, would not affect the price of article thereunder a particle. The metal schedule under both the Dingley and the Payne-Aldrich laws carries excess in almost every line. The entire labor cost of producing steel and manufactures thereof in this county is but 20 per cent of the total production cost, yet the tariff on necessities alone is nearly 30 per cent, half again as much as is paid for the labor going into them. This excess tariff is used by the steel trust and subsidiary and allied companies to mulct the consumer in America, while at the same time it enables it to market its products in competition with the world at prices much below those charged Americans. The steel trust gets out price lists of all its products. The ones issued to the home trade contain one set of discounts, those to the foreign trade another. The list is a very exhaustive one, embracing practically every thing manufactured of iron or steel.

Wednesday and Thursday mornings the people might have thought that the city was having a riot, if they would take the evidence of their ears for it, but it was not the case. From the time that the memory of the old, est inhabitant runs not to the contrary, pigeons have made their home in and around the cupola and roof of the court house. The county commissioners thought it should be exterminated, and invited the men around town who like to shoot at the festive bird on the wing to get out their shot guns and have a try at it. The men responded in goodly number and for two or three hours on those two mornings the shot gun brigade made, a great deal of noise and succeeded in materially reducing the number of pigeons that inhabited the temple of justice. There was some mighty fine shooting done, and furnished a good deal of sport both for the shooters and the spectators.

The sales of Royal week, of equal importance with the show in spreading the good word and works of purebred live stock, will be made up of exceptional offerings in the four beef breeds. There will also be sales, by auction and private, of grade feeding cattle, and range bred cattle, both of which are shown in the Royal by carlots. The breeding cattle will go to all parts of the country, to add a necessary touch to the character of a purebred herd, or to improve the standard of a grade herd. The feeding cattle will go to the districts that have corn to put into them, where they will be finished for the winter market.
